

FREQUENT FLYERS: CAUTIOUSLY RETURNING TO THE SKIES

COVID-19 has changed the way people travel, which has directly impacted airlines and their passengers. A new poll of frequent flyers showed that many passengers plan to return to the skies within the next six months, but that airlines and airports should implement various health and prevention practices to keep people safe and comfortable. This includes continuing to practice hygienic recommendations for employees and passengers, but also utilizing contactless technology to check-in and screen passengers.

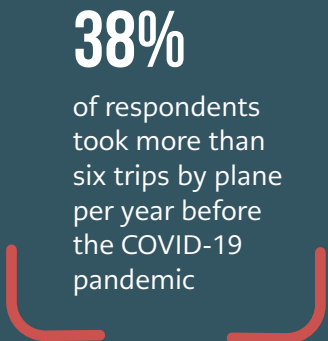

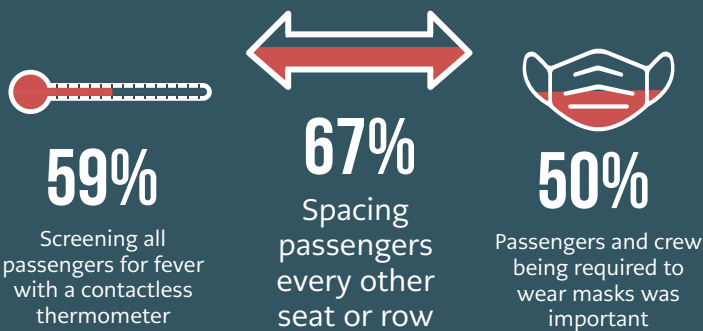

Frequent Flyers who plan to travel within next 6 months:

Reasons for traveling the next 6 months:

When asked what would make people more comfortable taking a flight in the wake of COVID:

Flying Since Lockdown:

Frequent Flyers reported that facial recognition would be most beneficial at:

